Collective bargaining is one of the cornerstones of the labour movement. It is a right earned after generations of struggle, a right that brings a level playing field for workers when they bargain with employers.

Your right to freely negotiate a contract with your employer is under attack!

With Bill 115, the government stripped bargaining rights from 55,000 CUPE school board workers. Then the same Liberal government proposed another bill to take those rights away from nearly half a million more workers in the broader public service.
